

Masthead Logo

The Iowa Review

Volume 12

Issue 2 Spring-Summer: Extended Outlooks: The Iowa Review Collection of Contemporary Writing by Women

Article 54

1981

Abishag

Shirley Kaufman

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Kaufman, Shirley. "Abishag." The Iowa Review 12.2 (1981): 198-199. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2723>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

Abishag · Shirley Kaufman

. . . and let her lie in thy bosom that the lord my king may get heat.

—1 Kings 1:2

That's what they ordered for the old man
to dangle around his neck,
send currents of fever
through his phlegmatic nerves, something like rabbit fur, silky,
or maybe a goat-hair blanket
to tickle his chin.

He can do nothing else
but wear her, pluck at her body
like a lost bird
pecking in winter.
He spreads her out like a road map, trying to find his way from one point to another, unable.

She thinks if she pinches
his hand it will turn to powder.
She feels his thin claws, his wings spread over her like arms, not bones but feathers ready to fall.
She suffers the jerk of his feeble legs. Take it easy, she tells him, cruelly

submissive in her bright flesh.
He's cold from the fear of death, the sorrow of failure, night after night he shivers with her breasts against him like an accusation, her mouth slightly open,
her hair spilling everywhere.